Reasons And Motivation for Code Switching and Mixing as Communicative Strategy Among Arab Students Of AMU in India (A Communicative Approach) The present study came to discuss the phenomenon of code-switching and mixing as a communicative strategy amongst Arab students at AMU in India, including the study of Communication with code alternation within intra-cultural Communication by focusing on the factors behind language shift. Code switching and code mixing Consider as a normal result of bilingualism which is the process of interaction in two or more languages in a multilingual and multicultural communities. This study analyzed when, and why Arab students at AMU switch/mix in order to investigate the reasons and motivation behind their switching and mixing in daily communication in both Arabic and English. Code switching and code mixing is a common phenomenon in India as multilingual and multicultural society. It is common practice for language users to mix languages in their everyday conversations, and the phenomenon of code switching/mixing is regularly observed. Code switching/mixing takes place in both intercultural communication and in intra-cultural communication among people of the same culture or different cultures.
