SDG2: ZERO HUNGER

Hunger and food insecurity are critical global issues, which have been exacerbated by the pandemic, conflict, climate change, and inequality.

The World Islamic Sciences and Education recognizes the gravity of this humanitarian challenge, and its jurisprudence and religious faculties pledge to work towards alleviating it through coordinated global efforts. Additionally, the university's other faculties contributed to conferences, research, and seminars to promote awareness that hunger and food insecurity can be addressed through the provision of small projects, support for simple industries in developing countries, and scholarships that help in the development of communities. The university's policy is to encourage rationalization and saving of consumption so as not to affect the share of individuals and communities who are unable to do so.

The World Islamic Sciences and Education understands that hunger and malnutrition can result in individuals who are less productive, more susceptible to disease, and often unable to earn more and improve their livelihoods. Therefore, investing in important sectors such as agriculture is crucial in reducing hunger and poverty, improving food security, creating job opportunities, and building resilience to disasters and shocks.

The World Islamic Sciences and Education University organizes several activities annually, including "Tables of the Most Merciful" which provides food to the poor during the blessed month of Ramadan. Additionally, the university is committed to the bi-annual "charitable dish" event, where the proceeds are donated to the poor student fund, sponsored by a responsible and authorized body.

The food service provided on campus is considered one of the most important things and is constantly monitored to ensure that food services are provided to students as best as possible. Therefore, The World Islamic Sciences and Education University constantly strives to achieve food security by enabling all students and employees at all times to obtain sufficient food.

Safe and nutritious to maintain a healthy and active life.

The World Islamic Sciences and Education University continually strives to follow a set of health standards, procedures, and precautionary measures affecting the security and safety of components, goods, and food products provided to students and employees by providing them with safe and clean spaces with the highest standards.
